International Study Visit:

Visiting at the speed of radicalisation

7th-12th of May 2017

This project has the financial support from the Council of Europe through the European Youth Foundation. It is coordinated by MIJARC Europe and hosted in Brussels with the support of the following member organisations:

Our annual work plan "RADICALLY AGAINST EXTREMISM"

In 2017 MIJARC Europe is running an annual Work Plan on the topics of radicalisation and extremism. The main aim of the work plan is to reach out to young women and men living in rural areas in Europe and support them in resisting and countering radicalisation and violent extremism.

This annual work plan will include a series of three activities which are interconnected and build on each other:

1. "Visiting at the speed of radicalisation" - a study visit in Brussels for a group of 12 young people. The aim of the visit is to create a group of multipliers that will be the Think Tank preparing and facilitating the next activity, the seminar. The idea is for the participants to have meetings with representatives of European institutions involved in the prevention of and fight against radicalisation of young people, encounters with experts on the topic of social inclusion and extremism and with European and international NGOs who run projects in the field. This activity will set the context for having a unified and prepared team able to run a quality seminar but it will also contribute to building the capacity of our member movements. It will give participants the chance to develop competencies that reduce their vulnerability to extremist views and at the same time it will motivate them to invest their energy in addressing these issues in their organisations and communities.

2. "Open Minds, Open Doors" - an international seminar prepared and facilitated by the people who attended the study visit which will be built on the knowledge and skills acquired during the first phase. The seminar will be centered on the issue of vulnerability of rural young people to radicalisation, focusing on sharing the realities of each country, on the exchange of opinions and on concrete solutions at local level. The seminar will use the traditional MIJARC Europe methodology of "See-Judge-Act" looking first at the contextual, personal and ideological factors that increase the vulnerability to radicalization of young people living in rural areas, then analyzing which of these factors have the greatest influence and finally deciding what measures to take and what tools to use in order to increase their resilience. The seminar serves to enable the critical thinking of participants and the reinforcement of our shared values. It helps participants develop competencies that reduce their vulnerability and it motivates them to take all these to the next level to inform and inspire others.

3. "Think European, share locally" - local round tables gathering rural NGOs, representatives of local public authorities and young people in order to present the results of the international activities and use the position paper as a starting point in analysing and re-discussing the local strategy on preventing radicalisation, fighting extremist attitudes and building resilience.

CONTENT OF THE STUDY VISIT

Even though violent radicalisation is not a new phenomenon in Europe, the ways it has been manifesting recently, the scale of the events and the use of new communication tools is bringing about new challenges when it comes to how to address the phenomenon and identifying its root causes. Today extremist attitudes are not triggered by just one single event but they are the result of very intricate and sometimes long term processes based on drivers such as fear, a strong sense of personal or cultural alienation, social marginalisation, xenophobia, discrimination, limited education or employment possibilities, political factors and ideological and religious beliefs. Rural youth is especially vulnerable to this, because they are more affected by all these drivers, especially limited education and resources, high unemployment, uncertainty about their future and social exclusion. Therefore, they are more susceptible to radicalisation fuelled and inspired by violence-inciting narratives, ideologies and political propaganda online and offline.

The study visit is the first activity of the work plan and it aims at creating a group of 12 multipliers from 12 different countries who will acquire the competencies to plan, implement and evaluate quality learning events for young people from rural areas on the topic of preventing radicalisation leading to violent extremism.

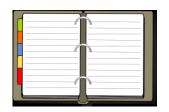

In order to achieve this, the study visit will pursue the following objectives:

- create a greater understanding of the root causes of radicalisation of young people and its consequences regarding violent extremism
- present research, best practices and approaches for combating radical propaganda targeting young people and any form of hatred based on intolerance online and offline

- give participants access to contact points in the European institutions and international NGOs that could support their daily work
- give the participants the chance to test the newly acquired knowledge and skills by preparing and/or facilitating the seminar

The programme of the visit will include meetings with representatives of European and international institutions with a role in fighting radicalization, visits to international NGOs who run projects on this topic and who work with young people at risk of radicalization and meetings with experts working with disadvantaged groups. Also, the participants will take part to short sessions on building facilitation skills and working with diverse cultural groups.

PARTICIPANTS

We are expecting 1 representative from each of our 12 member movements for a period of 4 full working days.

In the preparation phase (21st March - 31st April) each selected participant will conduct a small scale research at local level that will focus on the perception young people from rural areas have on extremism. The research will be conducted by means of a questionnaire that will be provided to the participants after the selection phase. They will have to collect answers from a minimum of 20 members of their organization and present the results of this small scale research during the study visit.

1 participant per member organisation

Profile of the participants

When selecting their representative, the member movement should have in mind the following criteria:

- young people aged between 18-30 years old,
- young people coming from rural areas from Europe, active in one of MIJARC Europe's member movements,
- interest in the topic of the rise of extremism in Europe,
- good command of English,
- access to a computer and Internet,
- committed to follow the activities of the work plan.

! Out of the 12 participants, 6 will form the facilitation team (Think Tank) for the international seminar but all 12 will be involved in designing the content and methodology of the seminar. Please indicate in your registration form if you are interested in joining the Think Tank.

! After the study visit, all 12 participants will be in charge of selecting and training the people who will take part at the seminar. They will work closely with their organisations and will be in permanent contact with the preparation team.
